Natural sea sponges

TSS alternative just as bad

by Sheila Svastisalee
Staff Writer

Following an outbreak of Toxic Shock Syndrome, many women seeking alternatives to tampons and sanitary napkins have switched to natural sea sponges. These women may also be risking TSS.

Two women using natural sea sponges have contracted TSS according to Michael Osterholm, section chief of acute disease epidemiology with the Minnesota Department of Health.

Sea sponges are found on ocean floors throughout the world where they feed on microscopic particles.

Sand, grit, fungi, and bacteria have been found in an analysis of 12 sponges by a group of Iowa researchers at the University of Iowa health laboratory.

Several biology professors at EWU were asked Tuesday about the use of natural sea sponges.

Dr. Horace Simms, whose specialty is fungi, suggested sterilizing the sea sponges at 20 lbs. pressure for 20 minutes to kill all fungus and bacteria. "I wouldn't recommend using sea sponges instead of tampons," he added.

Microbiologist Dr. Heidi Lightfoot also recommended boiling or pressure cooking the sea sponges. "I would want to know which supports the growth of less bacteria, the sea sponges or cotton tampons?"

Lightfoot added, "It's not possible to insert a sea sponge aseptically, nor is the vagina an aseptic environment."

Dr. Bruce Lang didn't believe it would be possible to get the sea sponges clean. "A sea sponge contains millions of little cavities, they feed on bacteria and fungus. I would not recommend their use."

Sacred Heart Hospital Epidemiology Department is recommending a moderate course of action to women according to Lynn Baird of Spokane's Planned Parenthood.

"They are recommending using tampons (other than Rely) during the day with frequent changes, and the use of pads at night," said Baird.

The FDA has warned that sea sponges have not been approved officially and should not be advertised as tampon substitutes.

Sex myths discounted

by Jerry King

How a man eats his food may hold the clue to his sexual abilities. And playing "footsie" can be an effective way to get a good sexual response from a woman.

These are the conclusions of medical experts involved in a seminar on "Sexual Problems in Medicine" conducted at Mount Sinai Medical Center in Miami.

Drs. William Masters and Virginia Johnson, well-known experts on human sexuality, discounted some commonly accepted myths about men's expertise on sexual matters and what they think stimulates women.

In a recent United Press article, Johnson said the male is not necessarily the expert on sex. "The greatest mistake he can make is to believe he must 'make his mark.'"

Noting that women generally have a higher physiological capability to respond to sexual stimuli, Masters said "the total body can be an erogenous zone." He said studies have shown some women "have been stimulated to orgasm" through manipulation of the toes.

A study by Dr. Maurice Yaffee of Guys Hospital in London, which established a relationship between impotence and eating habits, was also a feature topic at the seminar.

According to the study, slow, careful eaters were found to be

Poetry seen as therapy

by Jeannie Oesterreicher
EWU Journalism Center

Poetry is not just for English class anymore.

Innovative uses for poetry have been the basis for a poetry therapy group started by Joe Terhaar at Eastern Washington University. The group meets Wednesday nights on campus and is open to anyone interested in joining.

"Poetry therapy consists of people writing their own poems or identifying with other's, whichever is more helpful," Terhaar said in a recent interview.

The emphasis of the group is on self-exploration and self-expression, he said. Personal perceptions and feelings are what the group is interested in.

Terhaar, 25, is a graduate student seeking a master's in counseling psychology. He received his B.A. in elementary education, and psychology when he first became interested in using poems in the classroom.

Terhaar's assistant, Tim Bolewitz, works at Sacred Heart Hospital in the psychiatric unit as an occupational therapist. The two have worked together before in therapy groups and are currently trying to perfect techniques on poetry therapy for use in Terhaar's master's thesis.

"The poetry session is not geared to deciding if a poem is good or bad, analytically," Terhaar said. "Rather it is a way for people to learn to express themselves and a way to get at feelings which poetry can crystallize."

The spontaneity of the sessions and of writing poetry can counteract defenses that often get in the way, he said.

A technique he uses is to have group members write a poem starting each line with "I wish" or "I dream." "This is very effective when people can spontaneously write their feelings and not screen them," he said.

"It is up to each person to decide if they want to share their poems or their feelings. We hope that people will want to share but primarily we are interested in people becoming familiar with their feelings for themselves," Terhaar said.

Ground rules stipulate that the sessions are strictly confidential and are not to be discussed outside of the group. Members are not obligated to attend and may withdraw at any time.

"I like to manage the group in such a way that we steer away from rumination and stagnation. We encourage people to grow, not indulge in self-pity or use the therapy in a self-destructive manner," he said.

Hasan gets promotion

by Jim Crosby
Editor

After a three-year court battle, S.M. Jameel Hasan was promoted to a professor of business and management last Thursday.

"Right now I am in a pretty good state of contentment," Hasan said recently in an interview.

Along with the promotion, Hasan will receive back pay and compensation for benefits he would have been entitled to when his promotion was denied. The university also agreed to pay Hasan's attorney fees.

Following a Unit Personnel Committee's refusal to promote him in January 1977, Hasan filed a Level I grievance form.

A Level I committee convened and discovered that the UPC had made "significant computational and procedural errors and omissions."

The committee also determined that if the errors and omissions had not occurred, Hasan would have been one of the top three candidates for promotion to professors in the management department.

Three promotions were granted that year in the business management department.

Furthermore, the Level I committee recommended that Hasan take his grievance to the Faculty Appeals Committee, which is Level II.

Hasan filed his grievance with the FAC Sept. 25, 1977.

"From Sept. 25 through Nov. 7, I called about the status of my grievance. It was then I discovered that there was no committee," Hasan said.

The failure to appoint members to the FAC was a violation of WAC 172-129-080(4), which requires that the committee meet no later than Sept. 25.

"After I filed my grievance and received no communication on it, I petitioned Dr. Frederickson on the Level I decision," Hasan said.

Frederickson said that until a grievant exhausts all administrative remedies, including Level II, "I'm really reluctant to sit as judge," adding that Hasan should have waited until the FAC convened.

Reagan: Charming and quite alarming

Ronald Reagan's "landslide" election to the Presidency last week was not the mandate for his administration by the general populace that he would like the public to believe.

Reagan took a startling number of electoral votes, but he by no means won a landslide of the popular vote; it certainly was not of landslide proportions.

I do not believe those who voted for Reagan were especially crazy about a Reagan Presidency either. I think they just did not like Jimmy Carter. Likewise, those who voted for Carter did not like Reagan and those that voted for John Anderson did not like either one of them.

Whether Reagan's election will ultimately be good for the country remains to be seen. I personally do not think so, but inept presidents have been known to grow to the office in the past.

We can only hope.

Fortunately, very few political candidates transpire their campaign rhetoric into political action once they are actually in office.

I pray that the realities of the office will change Reagan's perceptions on some issues that are vital to the well-being of this country and the world.

If Reagan follows his campaign promises for economic recovery, many hard-fought-for environmental laws will be in severe jeopardy.

Reagan's closest business advisers—executives from the steel, oil and utilities industries—are pressing him for changes in the 10-year-old Clean Air Act. They particularly want to see less stringent national standards for sulfur dioxide emissions from auto exhausts and industrial wastes.

With the United States burning more coal to reduce dependency on foreign oil, sulfur dioxide levels are likely to rise because coal is very high in sulfur dioxide content.

We hardly need a relaxation of these laws. If anything stricter controls are needed, because sulfur dioxide emissions are the chief contributors to air pollution and acid rain (See Nov. 6 issue of The Easterner.)

ing these environmental controls impairs the progress of the nation's economic recovery.

So, his administration is expected to reduce federal pollution abatement standards it considers detrimental to growth and recovery.

They call that "regulatory reform."

I call it "insanity."

Kerry
Lyman

Since Republicans have also taken over control of the Senate, environmentalists may find themselves fighting an uphill battle to preserve environmental laws already on the books. Conservation leaders say they will now be looking more to the House for votes to block measures they oppose.

It is feared that the Alaska Lands Bill will be a major casualty of the recent election. The House and Senate have passed different versions of the bill to set aside over 100 million acres of federal land in Alaska for wilderness preservation, but it is now unlikely they will reach a compromise.

The Reagan Administration may send up its own bill on a take-it-or-leave-it basis because of this deadlock, ruining four years of effort on one of the most significant pieces of land use legislation in U.S. history.

Marion Edey, director of the League of Conservation Voters, says she expects the Reagan Administration to place a high priority on dismantling such key environmental programs as safeguards against toxic substances, radioactive wastes and destructive strip-mining for coal.

Other factors of Reagan's plan for economic recovery also cause me great concern.

Reagan has proposed gargantuan budget and tax cuts as the guts of his economic program, such as an immediate $35 to $40 billion tax cut to promote a quick recovery.

In addition, Reagan has proposed three more successive 10 percent personal income tax cuts, plus indexing taxes and accelerated depreciation. By his own admission, Reagan says this program will cost $192 billion a year by 1985.

Such a huge boost in the purchasing power of the American public could only result in renewed inflation unless a miracle occurs.

Walter Heller, Regents Professor of Economics at the University of Minnesota, says one such miracle would be that "contrary to all available economic evidence, the tax cuts would so greatly stimulate

Letters to the editor

He remembers Republicans

Editor:

I know that our new president will not read this. Hopefully, those who supported Reagan will read it, become watchdogs, and take heed. Maybe, they can learn something from this short history lesson.

Last night, after work, I sat in a local tavern drinking a beer. The man next to me, wearing old jungle fatigues, told me that he wasn't an alcoholic.

"Good," I said and continued drinking my beer.

"I was a gunner," he told me.

"Chopper?"

"No, armored cav. Tanks. You were over there too, huh?"

"Yeah, 3rd Marines. '67-68."

"God, maybe you knew my brother. Dave...?"

"No, I don't remember the name."

"He got blown away in Quang Tri City during Tet."

"Sorry to hear that. It was bad there."

"Yeah, but it was a long time ago."

Someone told the guy then that it was his turn at the pool table.

As he walked away, I noticed that he limped.

"RPG. Shrapnel."

After he left, I looked around the place and saw three others who had been in Viet Nam. All of them, including myself, had been injured.

I feel that many lessons can be learned from this little episode. The point I would like to make is this: Regardless of how strong Mr. Reagan makes our military (conventional and/or nuclear) the bullets and shrapnel of third rate, third world countries can maim people and shatter families as easily as our expensive, first rate arsenal. He has already made the threats.

Please, do not let it happen again.

Wants Reagan impeached

Editor:

Now that the American public has stooped so low as to elect a man like Ronald (Blockade Cuba) Reagan President, I have a question: Where do I write to be registered as a conscientious objector and/or when does the next plane to a neutral country leave?

I would also like to take this opportunity to be the first to call for Ronnie's impeachment.

Let's get back to work

by Jim Crosby
Editor

There is a set of regulations here at EWU that has kept two people in and out of Spokane County Superior Court for the last three years.

I am talking, of course, about the Faculty Appeals and Grievance Procedures and the interpretations of them by EWU President H. George Frederickson and (now) Professor S.M. Jameel Hasan.

These two individuals spent countless hours in court, at home and in school (not to mention the money they spent) hashing out what seems to me to be a difference in opinion.

It is time they could have spent usefully in their jobs, which, by the way, is educating.

President Frederickson believes that instead of him deciding the validity of Hasan's 1977 promotion denial grievance, Hasan's colleague's should have.

To say the president was upset by a court judge telling him to decide Hasan's promotion is a gross understatement. He doesn't want the courts meddling in the university's business.

Frederickson wanted Hasan's colleague's to decide whether he should have been promoted.

Hasan, on the other hand, saw it a different way, under a different light.

After receiving Level I (department chairman/dean) decision that his peers had made computation errors in his evaluation for promotion and after being told that he should have been promoted, Hasan did not think it right to go to Level II (the Faculty Appeals Committee).

And Hasan was right, to an extent. The university's faculty grievance procedures do not contain a clause which delineates the procedures that a faculty member should follow after he receives a favorable Level I decision.

Hasan interpreted the non-existent clause as meaning he should go to the president (Level III) after Level I; President Frederickson has the idea that it is customary for the faculty member to go to Level II before Level III.

So, who is right? The court said Hasan is.

I do not think anyone will be right until a committee is formed to straighten out and clarify the regulations.

And it should be done quickly before the university finds itself devoting more time to litigation than to education.

Hughes criticized

Editor:

Steve Hughes, your so-called "staff columnist", is a deterrent (sic) to your otherwise fine newspaper. He seems to lack any knowledge of proper journalism. I assume a staff member given the large amount of space that Hughes is given would have proper journalism background.

It is my understanding that Hughes has never taken a class in journalism at EWU and has little or no background whatsoever in writing (as proven by his shoddy attempt at hard news in the Oct. 30 edition of The Easterner concerning campus thefts.)

Unfortunately, his poor writing abilities have been assigned to the most important issue facing Americans—electing a president.

Most local newspapers would not think of allowing even their best writers to attempt to analyze such a complex issue. Instead, they rely on experts who write objective syndicated columns. I cannot believe a campus newspaper editor would actually assign an inexperienced writer, with obvious political biases and hatreds, to tackle such a challenging assignment.

For your information I am not a Republican or a Democrat. What I am is convinced that Steve Hughes is dragging down the quality (sic) of your publication.

I sincerely suggest that he be assigned to something more suitable to his ability and experience—such as circulation.

EWU world premier set to open here tonight

Playwright, and actor, Joseph L. Mitchell rehearses with lead actress Merrell Munk, who portrays his girlfriend Nancy in "Big Bucks and Three Piece Suits Til Kingdom Come, Amen!" The contemporary drama explores the nature of emotional commitments and the stresses that occur as a result of those commitments.

by Debbie Bohnet
Staff Writer

The sensational world premiere of "Big Bucks and Three Piece Suits Til Kingdom Come, Amen!" opens tonight at 8. This exciting real-life drama will be performed in the university theatre.

"Big Bucks..." was written by Joseph L. Mitchell, a senior in Radio-Television at EWU. It is a story based on Mitchell's real life experience.

"It was a personal experience although I greatly exaggerated it to make it more theatrical," he said.

The two and a half hour play took Mitchell a year to write. "I wrote the first act in the bathtub. My wife was home to watch the kids so I just soaked in the tub and wrote. The second and third acts took much longer," Mitchell explained.

The story line of the play speaks on serious social issues. "It was not written to exploit a race but is intended rather to give a balanced portrayal of some of the serious moral questions that modern-day Americans are faced with. The definite statement of the play concerns the excesses of rigidity in belief and the destructive nature of this rigidity," he continued.

The drama centers around the relationships Jack has with his best friend Phill and his Italian girlfriend Nancy. "There are no villains except maybe the circumstances these people find themselves in," Mitchell said.

"There are a lot of light moments in the play. It is not just mindless entertainment. I think it is a story that every adult will be able to relate to in some way," the author surmised.

The play hosts a cast of ten consisting of four black and six white actors. Mitchell plays Jack, the male lead in the play.

"I wanted to just sit back and watch the final production on stage but not enough black male actors auditioned. So I have the lead. I really don't have much confidence in my acting, but rehearsals are going well so far," Mitchell said.

Merrelle R. Munk, a fashion merchandizing major, stars as Jack's girlfriend Nancy. Stanton D. Wilkerson, Mitchell's real-life friend from Spokane will play Phil.

The play is directed by Gene Engene, the director of the University Theatre and Dance department. Engene spent many hours going through the original script with Mitchell pointing out where characters needed tightening and definition and where movement was lacking.

"We originally had a happy ending, which was how I like it best, but some women feminists suggested it was a cop-out ending. So I rewrote it. We might alternate endings each night to see which one works best and is best received by the audience," Mitchell said.

The play is entered in the American College Theater Play-write Competition Festival. If it wins the regional festival, the cast will travel to Oregon to perform it. From there, if the play wins the national competition they will perform it in Washington D.C.

The production company is in contact with theaters across the country now. Any school who requests production rights will have to pay Mitchell royalties to perform it.

Just what is next for this multi-talented author and student? "I would like to write for television if I can get my foot in the door. However I am trained in advertising and promotion, so if I can't write I'll go into the broadcasting end of it."

So no matter what the future holds, one can be sure that for Joseph Mitchell the show will go on in one form or another.

Current campus research shown at Science Fair

by Sheila Svastisalee
Staff Writer

"Step right up, who will be my next victim?" said Dr. William Williams with a devilish smile.

He is not a fiendish ghoul left over from Halloween but a professor of psychology trying to interest junior high and high school students in higher education through the recent EWU Science Fair.

A group of kids surge forward, arms waving, calling, "Me, me choose me."

All want to be victimized, hooked up to the mad scientist's machine, a Beechman Polygraph.

"I had originally planned to lecture on our research in psychophysiology," said Williams.

Psychophysiology is the study of mental responses in relation to bodily function, such as, pulse rate or sweat activity.

What happened was kids discovered they could get a big reaction out of victims wired to the polygraph for pulse and sweat activity when they asked embarrassing questions such as: "Do you have a boyfriend? or Who did you kiss last night?"

Though the audience couldn't read the print out, Williams, chortling and rubbing his hands together would let them know when they had gotten an emotional response to their questions.

The polygraph machine is presently being used at EWU by Williams and his associates in their search for a noninvasive means of mapping the human brain.

"To date, most of our information on the human brain has been gathered either through surgery or invasion with drugs," said Williams. "Subjects were understandably brain damaged," he said.

Williams is attempting to eliminate the risks involved with mapping the brain and open research into the normal human brain.

Three types of electronic means of measuring brain activity are being tested.

"We want to assess activity on the left and right side of the brain," said Williams.

"We know most people process language and produce speech from the left side of the brain. We've learned spatial perception is handled by the right side of the brain," Williams added.

One method of testing this theory is to measure brain activity by checking one's BVP or Blood Volume Pulse.

Photo cells are placed in the cethalic region, just above the eyebrows. Differences in blood flow passing through the arteries can be measured.

"We hope measuring these exterior vessels will give us an idea of what is going on in the interior brain," he said.

The team effort involved in this research and the Fair presentation include: Bill Stewart, Dave Strayer, Mark Macias and Pamela Blackwood.

The program will include such selections as "Tuning Up," by Toshiko Akiyoshi, "Come Sunday," a gospel ballad by Butch Nardal, and the Woody Herman classic, "Opus de Funk."

The event is free and open to the public.

Recreation programs offer challenges, thrills

by Ginny Kavanaugh

Eastern offers a wide variety of classes to meet the individual needs of each student. Education is for those who like to teach, business for those who can tolerate the paper work, and theater or dance for those who like to perform. For the bold adventurer EWU's outdoor recreation classes offer unique physical and mental challenges.

There are five options offered to outdoor recreation majors according to Alan Ewert, professor of recreation. These classes will help those interested in working with various adventure programs, the Parks and Forest Service, as well as those who want to start their own business.

While they may not climb Mount Everest, EWU students are given a thorough education in crevice rescue, and snow and glacier travel. The mountaineering class (Rec. 307) takes two field trips to Canada and Mt. Rainier, where they can apply their classroom training in practical situations.

Basic camping skills are taught in the wilderness backpacking class (Rec. 206). Students learn about proper wilderness attire, how to read maps and compasses, how to purify water and cooking on a camp stove.

A course designed to build one's confidence is Outdoor Adventure (Rec. 325). Students are taught rappelling and rock climbing. They are also taught rope courses, using the ropes to walk across high places, and swing from place to place, Tarzan style. As a group the class is placed in the woods at night with directions to find the north star and head east.

If the outdoor adventure group should get lost, there would be nothing to worry about, EWU's Search and Rescue class (Rec. 415) would find them in no time at all. The class is carefully trained by a variety of specialists. They are often asked to respond to calls of help from the Sheriff's department.

The class which provides the ultimate challenge for the true outdoorsman is survival education (Rec. 415). After a quarter of careful training in basic life support skills, the students get a chance to act. With only a can for water, a flint steel, a wool blanket and the clothes on their backs, they must survive a week end in the woods.

Ewert said a more in-depth recreation program is known as Outward Bound, is offered by only seven schools in the U.S. The nearest school is located in Portland. The classes are held outside ranging in length from nine days to a whole semester. Credits vary according to length of classes.

Outward Bound is a good idea for any outdoor recreation major to consider. It offers much more experience than just a week end. Its goal is to build personal confidence and knowledge that will enable the participant to handle any type of situation that may arise while camping. For more information contact Ewert at 359-7097.

Reagan

work, savings and investment that the resulting revenue reflow would largely or wholly pay for the tax cuts."

Heller says another miracle that would prevent Reagan's immense tax cuts from producing more inflation would be for Reagan to cut the budget so drastically that the inflationary impact of the tax cuts would be offset.

Reagan's figures show a required cut of $64 to $92 billion a year by 1985 to do this. Adding a modest $30 billion to the defense budget to carry out Reagan's campaign promises of a stronger military would raise the non-defense budget-cutting targets to $94-$122 billion a year.

What would be cut from the budget to reach these ambitious goals?

Reagan's plan would require a 50 percent-plus cut to all programs other than defense, interest on the debt and "necessary entitlements already granted to the American people" such as Social Security and health care benefits and unemployment compensation.

This means a 50 percent or more cut in programs such as international affairs, transportation, education, revenue sharing and energy.

Heller says this "simply cannot be done." And he is right. Only a man of Reagan's innumerable mental capabilities would think it possible.

Heller, who also served as the Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under President Kennedy and Johnson, says of Reagan's economic policies "His rhetoric is charming and disarming, but the content is quite alarming."

Brothers—Sisters plan info night

"I made a guarantee at one point that if he (Hasan) went to Level II, I would abide by the Level II's recommendation," Frederickson said.

Asked what a faculty member should do after receiving a favorable Level I recommendation, Frederickson said, "We have assumed that the Level I grievant, according to the by-laws, can appeal to Level II. If it is favorable, the matter goes to the president. If the president is satisfied, then the matter simply goes to the Board of Trustees."

"However, if the president is not satisfied, then the custom is that the president refers it to Level II."

"It is more a matter of custom. The by-laws does not say you can not do it and we have assumed that since the by-laws does not say we can not do it...that is was acceptable to go ahead and do it," Frederickson said.

That procedural point, Frederickson said, was what Hasan challenged in court.

Between February and May 1978, Hasan said he made "several goodwill attempts" to settle the promotion issue "without resorting to litigation."

Among those attempts, Hasan said, was to appoint a committee composed of three "vice" people, including a former FAC chairman, to adjudicate the issue.

"Frederickson declined, and I still don't know why," Hasan said.

"I always felt that Level II was never necessary, but to avoid the lengthy litigation, I was willing to live by a decision by highly respectable vice people," he said.

Both alternatives were rejected by Frederickson.

In May 1978, Hasan filed suit in Spokane County Superior Court to compel Frederickson to make a decision.

The court ruled that the Level I administrator did not have the authority to make a final decision in the issue and that Hasan should proceed through Levels II and III.

Hasan appealed the decision. The Appellate Court decided in Dec. 1979 that a favorable Level I recommendation did not require Hasan to appeal to Level II, and ordered Frederickson to promote Hasan if he was convinced the promotion would have been awarded if not for errors and omissions.

"By then the courts had said, 'we want you to review the record.' And I said I don't want to review the record, I want his colleagues to review the record, they are a better judge than I am," Frederickson said.

mostly sensuous lovers. Slow eaters who did not enjoy their food had trouble attaining and maintaining an erection, while fast eaters were either susceptible to premature ejaculation or had few sexual episodes.

Also covered were incestuous relationships. Dr. Howard Engle of Mount Sinai spoke of brother-sister relationships as the most common. But he pointed out that the mother-son relationship was the most dangerous of all.

'Little Mary Sunshine' delivers comic nostalgia

by Kelly Hitchcock

Nostalgia buffs who are not above a little schmalz will have a chance to indulge their passion tonight at the Showalter Auditorium when the University Music Theatre presents "Little Mary Sunshine."

A spoof of 1930 musicals, it is set in an old Colorado mountain town. The song and dance routines are based on operettas by Jeanette McDonald and Nelson Eddy.

"Little Mary Sunshine" is deliberately filled with cornball songs and situations. The 24 songs include clapping choruses, crazy waltzes, and lilting duets such as "Once in a Blue Moon," "Colorado Love Song" and "Mata Hari."

The plot uses all the characters essential to an oldtime melodrama: a beautiful, ever-optimistic Mary is played by Shawna Reitan, her stalwart captain portrayed by Stan Bech. Fodie Jo Short plays Mary's coquettish maid, Paul Atkinson is the corporal, Rosemary Como is a retired German opera singer, and Randy Fraiser is the slightly lecherous general.

The cast is further enhanced by several wild Indians, a troop of forest rangers, and a bevy of prudish finishing school girls on holiday. These assorted characters will be played by Steve Blocher, Jeff Bush, Craig Smith, Terry Friel, Carol Gabrielli, Steve Micek, Rochelle Montgomery, Scott Murphy, Bob Schulyer, Beth Warrich, Jane Wride, Linda Dyer, and Pam Feigenbutz.

Students from all over the campus, majoring in many different areas, will participate in tonight's show. One member of the cast, Paul Atkinson, had originally tried out for the position of accompanist. After being talked into a singing audition, he was cast as the male lead.

Another member of the cast, Stan Bech, has starred in eight musical productions and was also the lead in "South Pacific" at Big Bend Community College in Moses Lake, Wash.

Usually, the choreography and publicity of a production are done by two or more individuals. However, both are being done for this play by the multi-talented Kim Resnik Weeks. Costumes are by Kathlyn Haskins, the assistant director is Shawna Reitan, and the accompanists are Paul Atkinson, Ilene Crawford, and Tami Lybbert.

The set was designed by Curt Schnell, an alumni of EWU. Schnell has done designs for the Civic Theatre in Spokane and is now with Universal Studios in Los Angeles.

Director John Duenow said, "The students are doing really well. It's difficult to put together a show of this complexity in seven weeks. They're showing great effort and everything and everyone is pulling together really well."

The New York Times describes the play as "A merry and sprightly spoof of an era when 'justice always triumphed', when 'good meant good and bad meant bad.' The burlesque is delightful and humorous..."

"Little Mary Sunshine" provides fine entertainment for the entire family. Performed in Showalter Auditorium, it will run tonight, Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. There will also be a matinee on Sunday, Nov. 16 at 3 p.m. Tickets will be available at the door; $2 for adults and EWU students with ID will be admitted free.

Tonight, Friday and Saturday at 8...

Shawna Marie Reitan, right, will be featured with Rosemary E. Como, center, and Stan Bech in the EWU Music Theatre's presentation of "Little Mary Sunshine." This musical spoof of operettas from the 1930s is slated as nostalgic comedy suitable for the entire family.

Peace Corps rededicated at Kennedy founding site

Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie, speaking at Peace Corps 20th anniversary rededication ceremonies in Ann Arbor, Mich., called for rejecting the philosophy of defeatism and despair and instead said "...for our sake, as well as for others, we must continue the battle...against world poverty and hunger and hopelessness."

Muskie, joined by the first director of the Peace Corps, Sargent Shriver, and the current director, Richard F. Celeste, spoke from the steps of the Student Union at the University of Michigan. It was the spot where 20 years earlier, then presidential candidate John F. Kennedy gave birth to the idea of the Peace Corps.

Kennedy had arrived at those steps at 2 a.m. in the morning on Oct. 14, 1960. Ten-thousand students were waiting up for him. They heard Kennedy challenge their "willingness to contribute a part of your life to this country." He had said "I come here tonight asking for your support for this country over the next decade." Two decades later, Kennedy's idea for service continues through the Peace Corps.

Twenty years later, on Oct. 14, 1980, 3,000 people braved a cold, damp Michigan day, gathering on the steps of the Student Union to hear Muskie, Shriver and Celeste speak of the Peace Corps, its past, present and its future, in a world of rapid and drastic changes.

The ceremony marked the beginning of the year-long series of events celebrating the 20th anniversary of the Peace Corps.

"Cooperation... Allows us to live in the world."

Sam Brown, director of ACTION, the federal agency for volunteer service programs including the Peace Corps, set the theme of the day by saying "cooperation, not competition, allows us to live in the world."

Also participating in the rededication ceremony were Reps. Carl D. Pursell (R.-Mich.) and John J. Cavanaugh (D.-Neb.); former Michigan Governor G. Mennen Williams; University of Michigan President Harold T. Shapiro; and Yolanda King, a member of the Peace Corps Advisory Council, and daughter of the late Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Among the 124 former Peace Corps volunteers at the ceremony were Alan Guskin, chancellor of the University of Wisconsin, who, hearing Kennedy's words 20 years ago, accepted the challenge and became one of the first Peace Corps volunteers; and Dale Yamauchi, recently returned from Brazil where she was the 80-thousandth volunteer to have served in the Peace Corps.

Raising his voice to be heard over a small but noisy group of anti-draft demonstrators, Muskie reminded the crowd that some 600-million people in the world today live in the most desperate poverty. He said that in the changing world of the 80s, there is a new reality: "the growing together of our future with the futures of peoples in the developing world... Those of you have served with the Peace Corps around the world have a first-hand appreciation of the histories that separate the world's people's and the destinies that unite us."

Muskie drew applause from the audience when he challenged the 20 placard-carrying protesters: "You think life is hard for you? Why don't you join the Peace Corps and find out what real hardship is?" Citing examples of Peace Corps programs in Malaysia, Monserrat, Upper Volta and Malawi, Muskie said: "These few examples reflect a larger fact: Peace Corps today is making a difference in the only way that matters--on the daily lives of individuals whose daily lives are harshest."

Reflecting on the service of 80-thousand men and women who volunteered through the Peace Corps since 1961, Muskie said: "The Peace Corps struck a chord of compassion and decency deep within the American character, a core of human values that has been--and still is--among our most powerful national assets."

Later in the day, Celeste spoke of vast, global changes during the last 20 years and of the need for institutions to keep up with those changes. "Just as change comes personally to Peace Corps volunteers, just as change must come to the Peace Corps itself as it reshapes itself for the second 20 years," he said, "so our Peace Corps experience must lead us to speak out more broadly for change in the habits and institutions of our nation."

Celeste said that to share in building a more just, a more humane, and thus a more peaceful world, "...a Peace Corps which focusses more effectively on basic human needs in the Third World, which builds bridges across national boundaries, can be one key vehicle through which Americans respond to the global challenges of the next two decades."

"A critical point in history..."

The need for change was also noted by Tarzie Vittachi of Sri Lanka. Currently deputy director of UNICEF and an internationally-known journalist, Vittachi said, "...we have reached a critical stage in the history of our race. The age we are passing into calls for a fundamental change in social and political institutions, in economic measurements and objectives, in the perception of the magnitude and nature of human needs..."

The Peace Corps is an autonomous part of ACTION, the federal agency for volunteer service programs which include: VISTA (Volunteers in Service to America), Foster Grandparents Program, Senior Companion Program, RSVP (Retired Senior Volunteer Program), and University Year for ACTION.

Persons interested in information about service in the Peace Corps and other ACTION programs may call 800-424-8580, ext. 93, toll free.

Student advising

The first of three priority periods for winter quarter registration begins November 17, 1980. With this thought, General Undergraduate Advising would like to take this time to pass on information useful to the Declared and Undeclared Majors.

The Declared Major Departmental Advising period runs from Nov. 17 to Nov. 21. During this time students should make an appointment with their advisor for selecting classes, defining programs and working out problems that may have been encountered during the Fall Quarter.

If you are considering declaring your major, stop by Showalter 105, General Undergraduate Advising, and fill out the Major Declaration form. This will allow us to forward your file to the respective department for your further advising needs.

For those undeclared majors needing specific advisement contact our office. If you're undecided or just need clarification about classes you want to take Winter Quarter, contact General Undergraduate Advising for assistance.

This quarter the Registrar's Office is requesting that all students select alternates for their first choice classes. This process will help reduce the unusually large number of partial schedules encountered during fall quarter.

The priority registration forms for Winter Quarter are: Nov. 17 to Dec. 5, Dec. 8 to Dec. 22 and Dec. 23 to Jan. 9.

Bus routes planned

West Plains residents will have the opportunity to examine three different system concepts for the proposed expansion of the Spokane area transit system at a 7:30 p.m. workshop Wednesday, Nov. 19 in the Cheney City Hall auditorium, 609 2nd.

At the workshop meeting in September in Medical Lake citizens called for improved routes and services to reach destinations within their own planning subareas as well as improved park and ride service.

The September meetings began the process of developing a transit plan by gathering information on travel desires within and between seven separate subareas within the new Spokane County Public Transportation Benefit Area (PTBA). The second workshop series, Nov. 12-20, puts these desires into a system-wide view for the 90 percent of Spokane County's residents who live in the new transit service district.

There are three basic system concepts being considered, according to Michael L. Darland, consultant for the project. They are the radial system, currently in use in Spokane; the grid system, used in many large cities; and the multi-center system, which has several terminal points with connecting routes.

Many people involved in the first workshop series wanted to travel to and from the subarea just north of the Spokane Central business district and extending to Francis Avenue, according to Darland. This, plus a considerable interest in travel between widespread residential and business areas, major employers and medical centers, may indicate the usefulness of the multi-center concept.

Workshop attendees will also consider what performance standards should determine the ways that these systems could operate. The frequency of trips, days and hours of operation and transfer options will be among standards addressed.

Citizens will also have the opportunity to draw in their first, second and third general routing priorities on maps provided for that purpose, explained Jan deLaubenfels, chairman of the citizens' advisory committee which has planned the sessions.

Chairman deLaubenfels urges residents who find it inconvenient to attend the Nov. 19 workshop to attend one of the five others:

Wednesday, Nov. 12, 7:30 p.m., Central Valley High School multipurpose room, S. 821 Sullivan Rd.

Thursday, Nov. 13, 2 p.m., Great Northwest Bank, Community Room, N. 222 Wall.

Thursday, Nov. 13, 7:30 p.m., Ferris Senior High School cafeteria, E. 3020 - 37th.

Tuesday, Nov. 18, 7:30 p.m., Mead Senior High School large auditorium, W. 302 Hastings Rd.

Thursday, Nov. 20, 7:30 p.m., Rogers High School cafeteria, E. 1622 Wellesley.

Free transportation will be provided by Spokane Transit System to all but the downtown Spokane meeting by phoning 328-RIDE 24 hours in advance and mentioning "transit workshop."

Interview class offered

by Brad Loosveldt
EWU Journalism Center

Some people think graduating with a B.A. Degree will guarantee them a good job. They do not realize how important the job interview is; it could be the difference between getting the job or not.

Forrest "Skip" Amsden, the director of EWU's Career Planning and Placement office at Showalter Hall, said "People who come to us and take the interview class and listen to what we say will be a head and shoulder better than those who don't."

The CPP office compiles up-to-date notebooks containing firm names, what jobs are available, where the firm is located and where to send the resume.

"We have contacts with many businesses and school districts nation wide," Amsden said. "We make appointments with these representatives for an interview. We publicize in the Focus and in placement fliers which representative is coming to the campus at what time and date."

The CPP office also aids students in obtaining interviews with employers who do not come to the campus.

"I can help the student by calling the firm and asking them if the interviewer would meet the interviewee anywhere on the interviewer's route," Amsden said.

"Eastern Washington University competes very well against colleges like Washington State University and Idaho University for jobs," he said.

"The CCP office will also help prepare students for an interview. When a student finishes college, there is one last hurdle between the student and that job. And that hurdle is the interview. If you cannot clear that last hurdle, you are going to have a hard time getting that job."

The CCP has a three-week, two-credit interviewing class. Amsden said it is an excellent class. Inexperienced students are told how to prepare for the interview, what questions the interviewee is expected to ask and what questions the interviewee should stay away from. There is also a 40-minute video tape available. The tape puts people in interviewing situations, and indicates some of the questions that an employer might ask. It also gives the rule-of-thumb on how to dress for an interview.

While the EWU football team will not see any post-season action, coach Dick Zornes said "we definitely plan on coming home with a win" against Mesa College Saturday.

Gridders to finish in Colorado

Fresh from a resounding victory over Montana Tech, Eastern Washington University will be favored to wind up its 1980 football season on a winning note Saturday when the Eagles face Mesa College in Grand Junction, Colorado.

EWU snapped a three-game losing streak Saturday, grinding out 514 yards total offense as the Eagles earned their 12th home triumph in 13 starts over the last three seasons. Meanwhile, Mesa, rebuilding under rookie coach Bob Cortese, saw its record slip to 3-5 when the Mavericks dropped a 35-6 decision at New Mexico Highlands to complete their Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference season.

Eastern moves into its final start with five victories and four defeats. Mesa, an NAIA Division I school, has completed its conference season.

As coach Dick Zornes completes his second season at Eastern, the Eagles are expected to be at near peak physical condition. Fullback Bryan Johnson experienced some stiffness in his previously injured right leg, but he and his backups, Todd McGrady and Jim Banker, all are expected to be ready. McGrady sat out the Montana Tech contest with a slight shoulder separation. Banker was banged up early in the second half.

Twelve seniors will make their final appearance for EWU Saturday. In addition to Johnson, key players who will complete their eligibility include tailback Darryl Bell, offensive lineman Greg

Mesa is dominated by freshman and sophomores after the Mavericks won only one of nine starts while scoring only 84 points last fall.

Freshman quarterback Matt Kless, who has been fighting a knee injury, quick tailback Jerry Morris and freshman kicker Joe Durham have been among the offensive standouts. Morris is an outstanding kickoff returner and hard-running alternate tailback Andy Fox leads the conference in punt returns. The Mavericks, however, trail their conference in most defensive categories.

Gold in IM crown

Columbia Gold is the 1980 intramural football champion. Gold defeated Sure-Would-Ball 7-6 in a wind-blown, defensive battle last Friday.

Sure-Would struck first in the title game, scoring the first time they got the ball on a Max Cloyd to Doug Lemke pass. Sure-Would got possession of the ball by intercepting on the first play of the game.

Stingy defense by both teams kept the score at 6-0, until Gold struck suddenly with eight plays left in the first half. Stuck deep in their own territory, CG pulled off a nifty, double-reverse pass, good for 50 yards and a first-and-goal on Sure-Would's five yard line. On the next play wide receiver Gary Lyons made a leaping catch in the endzone. The extra-point was good and Columbia Gold had the lead 7-6.

Sure-Would had one last shot late in the game, after Jay Barrot intercepted his second pass of the day deep in his own territory.

With seven plays left, Sure-Would marched steadily down the field. Two clutch, first-down pass completions by Cloyd and a roughing penalty gave Sure-Would the ball on CG's 20 yard line with one play remaining. But an alley-oop pass intended for Rich Nuess was broken up at the last moment by Steve Hermes, and the title belonged to Columbia Gold.

The EWU men's racquetball team will be playing for all the marbles tonight as they take on the league leading Fairchild Air Force team at the air force base. The match will most likely decide the championship of the Greater Spokane Racquetball League.

Both teams enter the contact with identical 6-1 league records. But Fairchild is in first place because of more individual games won during their seven matches. Family Fitness Center of Spokane, also 6-1, is currently in second place followed closely by Eastern.

"If we can beat Fairchild we will probably win the league championship," said Eagle coach Pat Whitehill. "Family Fitness beat both us and Fairchild at the start of the season but lost to North Park, the team we beat last Thursday," Whitehill explained. And Whitehill compares tonight's opponent to North Park.

"Fairchild has a good strong team. I expect a lot of three-game matches, similar to the North Park contest. A one percent difference in ability at this level can mean the difference between a close match and a blow-out," Whitehill said.

Last Thursday, the Eagles dumped North Park nine matches to three but the matches were closer than the score may have indicated.

In league play, individual team members are seeded into divisions and play the best two of three games to 15 points. Against North Park, ten of the Eagles' 12 matches went to three games. Winners for the Eagles were John Bruntlett, Bill Broadhead, Butch Miller, Eric Spolar, Tim Tonani, Bob Arnold, Larry Rencken, Dave Braun and Mike Hess.

Eastern, who entered the match tied for third with North Park, is now in sole possession of third place while North Park dropped to fourth.

Women host weekend pair

by Jerry King
Sports Editor

The Eastern Washington University Women's Soccer Club will complete its second year of competition this weekend with a pair of home games against last weekend's hosts.

The Eagles will host the Coeur d'Alene Soccer Club on Saturday and the University of Montana on Sunday. Both games are scheduled for 1 p.m. on the intramural field.

Last Saturday, the Eagles destroyed Coeur d'Alene 9-1 in Idaho. Eastern scored three goals in the first five minutes to put the game away early over the first-year Idaho club.

Lisa Delsmon led the offensive barrage with three goals while Monique Velasam and Sue Alexis booted two goals each for the Eagles.

"We played pretty good and they didn't," said Eagle coach Dave Gilkey. "We just killed them."

Things were not quite as easy for the Eagles on Sunday as they lost to the University of Montana, 5-1. With six starters out with injuries and illness, the Eagles played a woman short with only ten players.

"We're looking to avenge the Montana loss," said a determined Gilkey. "We had to use some girls who had very little experience. We will beat Montana (Sunday) with a full team."

The weekend split put Eastern's record at 4-2.

Opp encourages individual effort among grapplers

by Chuck Bandel
Easterner Staff

Inside the red-padded room, two young men were tangled on the floor in a tight ball while four or five others looked on and laughed.

Surprisingly, one of the two involved in the scuffle looked up in response to an inquiry as to where Stan Opp might be found.

Opp, the head wrestling coach at Eastern Washington University, is not what you would expect a head coach to be.

"That's me, I'm Stan Opp," said the boyish-looking coach as he untangled himself from the grasp one of his varsity "kids." "What can I do for you?"

For starters, how about showing a driver's license or a birth certificate, is the thought that comes to mind when first meeting Opp. Of the more than 30 other young men standing around the wrestling room, he is the last one you would expect to be the head coach.

There is no one else in the room even close to being more qualified to be the head of the varsity wrestling program, however.

Opp came to EWU three years ago after being an assistant coach at South Dakota State University and the University of Iowa. He is currently preparing his team for the upcoming season, in which Eastern will be competing in Division II of the NCAA for the first time.

Opp, who is known to his players simply as "coach", brings with him a genuine concern for the young men he guides. Often, coaches at schools the size of and larger than Eastern put tremendous pressure on student-athletes to win, in order to insure their jobs as coaches. Opp is more concerned about his wrestlers' health.

"I just try to bring the kids along at a pace that is best for them," he said.

One of the major concerns of a wrestling coach is keeping his team at the proper weight. Opp has a realistic approach to the situation.

"I try to leave the weight up to the individual," remarked Opp in reference to his method of keeping players wrestling at certain weight divisions. "I'm not an advocate of cutting weight off these kids."

Opp prefers instead, to help maintain his athletes at a weight that is comfortable for each individual.

"If it looks like an individual is having trouble at a certain weight, I do have several weight control programs," he added.

student-athlete at South Dakota State, he was a three-time all-American at 118 pounds. He is also a past national champion at 105 pounds at the Amateur Athletic Union, Greco-Roman style tournament. In addition, he won the United States Wrestling Federation freestyle crown at 105 pounds.

On the wrestling mat, Opp coaches as though he were twice his 5-foot-4 inch frame. When he blows his whistle, the wrestlers gathered become attentive to his every instruction. Practices include several different stretching exercises which Opp feels are the key to a wrestler's success.

Despite his rapport with his kids, Opp knows when it is time to be serious about the program. "That's the second practice you've been late to this week, and it will be the last," he said with an icy stare as he confronted a late-arriving member of the squad.

After practice, Opp relaxed in his office in the Phase I building and talked of the year to come and of years gone by.

"If we can just stay healthy, we should be a contender," he stated as he looked over the 1980-81 schedule. Behind him on the walls of the office were several plaques and trophies of previous wrestling successes.

He is most proud of a large trophy won by the 1978 EWU squad as a result of a third-place finish at the NAIA national tournament.

In his short reign at Eastern, Opp has coached seven NAIA all-Americans and he believes he could have a few more this year.

"We have five or six kids who could definitely be champs with some hard work and dedication," he optimistically remarked.

It is optimism and his ability to relate to the athletes that make Stan Opp a winner. After all, he even looks like one of them.

Swimmers ready

Eastern Washington University's swimming team will open their 1980-81 schedules Saturday, competing in the University of Idaho Relays in Moscow.

Coach Eileen O'Donnell, in her fourth season, has 19 candidates for the women's team and 13 swimmers on the men's team as EWU begins to expand its swimming and diving programs in conjunction with the opening of the modern EWU Aquatics Center. In recent years, Eastern has used borrowed facilities, primarily those at Fairchild Air Force Base.

"This is kind of the beginning for us," O'Donnell said. "With our own pool to attract quality athletes, we are going to be so much more competitive and I think now it will get better every year."

Men will compete in NCAA Division II and the women will compete in AIAW Division II.

With the new facility, major portion of a $2.1 million project, the Eagles have several quality freshmen to their teams. O'Donnell expects the men to show particular improvement with newcomers including freshmen Brad Thomas (Olympia), Theo Schmeckle (Pasco) and Mark Sanderson (Sheridan, WY) joining Eric Doering, sophomore transfer from Willamette University and juniors Steve Varney (Spokane) and Scott Arneson (Twisp) as the nucleus of the squad.

Senior Jeannie Whiteley (Medical Lake) is a 3-year letter-winner in the 200-freestyle and she heads the women's unit along with Lisa Deck (Walla Walla), who has two letters and diver Lisa Amberg (Palos Verdes, CA) who represented EWU in national competition last winter.

Women's volleyball gains at-large berth at regionals

Their hopes for a return to the AIAW Division II national tournament nearly ended last weekend, the Eastern Washington University women's volleyballers face three matches on the road this week to conclude their regular season competition.

The Eagles slipped into the upcoming regional tournament as an at large selection after a disappointing third-place finish in the Interstate League tournament last Friday and Saturday at the University of Idaho. The host school, seeded first, and Lewis-Clark State earned the league's first two spots in the Nov. 20-22 regionals at Western Washington University in Bellingham.

EWU met the strong University of Montana squad Wednesday night in Missoula. Friday, the Eagles return to Moscow for evening matches against Whitworth and Idaho. Montana won the only previous 1980 match between the two schools. Whitworth holds a 2-1 season edge over Eastern and Idaho has won all three matches.

Eastern (22-13) downed University of Portland and Western Washington in the league tourney last Friday, but fell to Idaho and Lewis-Clark on Saturday. However, senior stars Paula Nickerson and Lori Rohlinger, both of Spokane, were selected for the Interstate League all-star team. Linda Harris and Joanne Segur were picked on the second team.

Coach Mary Rubright again

cited lack of consistency for her club's failure last weekend. "But," she said, "we've still got a chance and I have hope we can take advantage of it."

"In your face, Montana Tech." EWU tailback Darrell Bell [28] and center Brent Myers [55] congratulate each other after Bell's 10-yard touchdown run. Bell, who had lost his starting job a week ago, came back in a "reserve" role to rush for 108 yards on 21 carries to pace the Eagles to a 33-3 home victory over Montana Tech.

Eagle 'trenchmen' manhandle Tech

The "men in the trenches", the offensive linemen are usually forgotten men when it comes to newspaper headlines. But the Eastern Washington University offensive line decided to take matters into their own hands last Saturday as they knocked the Montana Tech Orediggers all over Woodward Field in route to the Eagles lopsided 33-3 victory.

A small Armed Forces Day crowd saw the revitalized Eagles offense march over Montana Tech for 514 yards in total offense.

"Our offensive line was the difference," said Eagle coach Dick Zornes. "They played super. They really showed what they are capable of doing."

The Eagle line, led by the "super" play of John Tighe, Greg Garske, Brent Myers, Shamus Reilly, Walt Flatt and others, opened gaping holes enabling Eagle runners to rush for 320 yards. The pass protection was just as super, allowing Eagle quarterbacks to complete seven of 12 passes for 194 yards.

Not to be out done, the Eagle defense, after a shaky start, held Montana Tech to 227 yards on offense, with just 33 yards coming through the air. Eastern defenders allowed only one Tech pass completion.

The Orediggers highly-touted running back, Steve Housler, was bottled up, netting only 67 yards — nearly 50 yards below his season average.

"Our defense, once we adjusted to what they were doing, really stuffed them," said Zornes. "We had to change our defense slightly against their wishbone and power-I, and it worked."

Pete Sinclair led the Eagle defense recovering a blocked punt by Mark Puyear. Sinclair recovered a second fumble and Darrell Pope had an interception for Eastern.

After spotting Montana Tech a 37-yard, first quarter field goal, the Eagles exploded for 16 points in the second period. A 10-yard scamper by Darryl Bell (108 yards on 21 carries) put Eastern ahead for good.

Fullback Brian Johnson (46 yards on 10 carries), returning from a thigh injury that kept him sidelined for the past four weeks, scored on a one-yard plunge. Blaine Wilson sandwiched a 37-yard field goal between the two touchdowns, and the Eagles took a 16-3 lead at intermission.

The Eagles picked up right where they left off to start the second half, scoring 17 more points in a six minute span, putting the game on ice.

Bell scored on an eight-yard run. Dan Daly (5-10-0 for 144 yards) followed with a 47-yard touchdown pass to Mick Shockley (2 catches for 90 yards). Wilson put icing on the cake with a 32-yard field goal to round out the Eagle scoring.

The win snapped a three-game Eagle losing streak, raising Eastern's record to 5-4. Montana Tech, losing their fourth game in a row, dropped to 3-5.

Eastern will travel to Grand Junction, Colorado, for their season finale against Mesa College.

Eagle tailback Darryl Bell, after losing his starting job to Rick Raymond because of poor recent production and a minor leg injury, responded with 108 yards rushing and two touchdowns in a reserve role last Saturday.

WSU next in finale Soccer team downs NIC

Eastern Washington University will conclude its first season of varsity soccer Sunday when the Eagles host Washington State in the final game of the Northwest Collegiate Soccer Conference campaign.

The Eagles, who lost a 6-1 decision to the Cougars in Pullman Oct. 25, have a 5-8 record going into the season finale. All games have been league games.

Last week, coach Mike Holland's booters downed North Idaho College, 4-1, on Thursday before Montana tripped the Eagles, 5-2, in Missoula. The North Idaho triumph gave EWU three victories in its last four starts.

Sunday, at Montana, after a scoreless first half, EWU tallied first on a kick by John Matson. However, Montana answered with four successive goals before John Webster accounted for the other Eastern score.

Iranian students Saed Yakalem and Adel Mokbel continued their strong recent play in the victory over North Idaho in Coeur d'Alene. Mokbel opened the scoring and added another goal later. Yakalem tallied for the third straight match in the second half.
